Showing how to use Adobe Photoshop Hello users of Adobe Photoshop: I'm sure you've already heard of the image editing software that's highly respected the world over. It's called Photoshop and it's the most popular digital graphics editing software. Photoshop is Photoshop and it's not everything. You've got a solid repertoire of graphic tools that range from retouching to collage, but not all of them are required in every situation. So when you're faced with a new job, you have to know which Photoshop tools you should use to get the job done right. Maybe you're a web designer and you want to update your portfolio's header image. Or maybe you're a graphic designer who needs to edit an existing image. In this article, I'll teach you the difference between Photoshop and Photoshop Elements, and how you can use them when you need to. Steps to Follow when Editing your images with Photoshop Get Photoshop (Paid) For editing images using Photoshop, you're going to need to get a paid subscription to Adobe Photoshop. If you don't have a subscription already, you can do it for free, but you can't use some of the most important Photoshop tools. You'll also have to pay a monthly or yearly fee for the subscription. Learn how to use the Photoshop Tools, processes, and commands Most of the Photoshop images you'll ever need to edit are already in what's called a layered file. I've already mentioned that most Photoshop images use layers, but what do you do with layers? You can add or remove layers, and you can easily see where a layer falls and how it should look on other layers. In this section, you'll learn how to use Photoshop layers, and how to play with them in order to get the best result. I'll also teach you a few essential Photoshop tools and processes, and how to use them to create some stunning images. Learn about the four most important Photoshop Tools The first thing you're going to need to learn about if you want to edit your images is how to use the tools that are available. Photoshop has many tools, but there are 4 tools that

Q: How can I extract the contents of an embedded HTML page? I have a web page which uses HTML embedding to host (I think) Flash. I am using C# and.NET 3.5. In the code that contains the HTML, there is an action that calls a Javascript function. The Javascript function does some checks on the flash content to determine whether to execute the code in the body of the page. The Javascript function looks like this: function fswf(objectID) { if (objectID.substring(0,4) == 'about:blah') { document.parentNode.insertBefore("", document.body); document.parentNode.removeChild(document.body); } } It looks like this in the resulting web page: I need to be able to pull out the contents of the object tag (HTML tag and all). How can I do this? A: The answer is to use regular expressions and.NET's Regex.Match() method. This is how you would get the HTML from the page: var embedTag = Regex.Match("", "", RegexOptions.IgnoreCase); Then you can get the HTML like so:
