As you can see, the following day, the post got more than 7,300 views. That's impressive. On the other hand, the views were not as great as the likes of "The New York Times," or "The Guardian" of the world. Thus, the research community and the Internet have a lot to learn from the likes of Pew and PewDie. Here are their findings. Pew surveyed 2,252 adults in February 2012. The survey has a margin of error of +/- 2.1 percent. Pew has similar surveys in other demographics, including Brazil, France, Germany and India. PewDie has exactly 50,000 contributors worldwide. Over 90 percent of these contributors live in the United States, the U.K. and Canada, while there are also contributors in Western Europe, Asia and Australia. About 80 percent of the users are men and 20 percent are women. Pew's survey showed that the Internet's influence has grown in the past year, with PewDie's user base more than doubling from 2009 to 2012. The survey asked people whether they had used the Internet to discuss politics, religion and technology issues in the past year. Results show that there has been a 15-percent increase in the percentage of U.S. users who have done so in the past year, from 31 percent in 2009 to 46 percent today. This has increased the percentage of Internet users who discuss politics from 60 to 78 percent, religion from 19 to 32 percent and technology issues from 20 to 29 percent. More than six in ten users (64 percent) on PewDie say they have not discussed politics on the Internet in the past year, compared with 51 percent in 2009. Just three percent of U.S. Internet users say they have discussed religion on the Internet in the past year, up from 2 percent in 2009. Nearly nine in 10 (88 percent) say they have not discussed technology issues on the Internet in the past year. On PewDie, both men and women have been talking about political issues. Of the men, 72 percent say they have discussed political issues on the Internet in the past year, compared with 51 percent of women. However, there has been a clear decrease in the percentage of men who say they have discussed religion (17 percent in 2012 vs. 23 percent in 2009), and technology issues (16 percent vs. 20 percent). One of the biggest differences between the two sites is in the country's political divides. PewDie finds that 76 percent
